Basic documentation about the target:

Yandex N.V. is a Dutch holding company, now renamed Nebius Group (ticker: NBIS), that serves as the parent entity for the international arm of the former Russian tech giant Yandex. Following a historic divestment finalized in mid-2024, the company sold its Russian businesses to a consortium of local investors for approximately $5.3 billion (RUB 475 billion), effectively separating its international operations from its Russian assets.

The company is now focused on artificial intelligence infrastructure, managing international businesses such as Nebius AI, Toloka AI, Avride, and TripleTen, along with non-Russian assets like a data center in Finland. The original Russian entity retains the Yandex brand and continues to operate as a dominant player in the Russian internet market, while the rebranded Nebius Group seeks to lead global AI development from its headquarters in Amsterdam. Trading on NASDAQ under the former ticker YNDX was suspended during the transition and remains halted.

Director Departure Timeline

The departure of Yandex's senior leadership occurred rapidly in early 2022 following the Russian invasion of Ukraine and subsequent EU sanctions.

Key Leadership Changes

- Tigran Khudaverdyan: The Executive Director and Deputy CEO of Dutch-registered Yandex N.V. resigned on March 15, 2022, after being personally sanctioned by the European Union for allegedly manipulating search results.
- Elena Bunina: The Director General of Yandex LLC (the principal Russian operating subsidiary) stepped down from her role as CEO and HR director on April 2, 2022, two weeks before her tenure was scheduled to expire on April 15.
- Artem Savinovsky: Following Bunina's departure, senior manager Artem Savinovsky was appointed as acting Director General of Yandex LLC on April 2, 2022, and officially confirmed as the general director on April 14, 2022.
- Arkady Volozh: The CEO and founder of Yandex resigned from his position and the board of directors on June 3, 2022, after being personally sanctioned by the EU. Volozh held significant voting and economic interests in the company but stated the company itself had not been sanctioned.

Context of Turmoil

These executive changes were part of a broader period of instability for the company. Nasdaq suspended trading of Yandex shares in late February 2022, and the company reported its first quarterly net loss in April 2022 due to geopolitical developments. Additionally, board members Esther Dyson and Ilya Strebulaev resigned in March 2022.

Sanctions Timeline

Yandex N.V. and its subsidiaries have not been sanctioned by the US, EU, or UK. However, specific Russian entities and individuals associated with the company have faced various sanctions.

- Entity Sanctions: OOO PS YANDEX.MONEY (Yandex.Money) is listed on the OFAC Non-SDN Ukraine-EO13662 sanctions list, linked to Sberbank of Russia.
- Individual Sanctions: Arkady Volozh, Yandex co-founder, was added to the EU sanctions list in June 2022 but was removed in March 2024 after he condemned the war in Ukraine and cut ties with the Russian arm. Tigran Khudaverdyan, former Deputy CEO, was also sanctioned by the EU in March 2022.
- Website Sanctions: Yandex operates its own AGS filter (anti-spam filter), which can "ban" or de-index websites for spam or non-unique content; this is an internal search engine sanction, not a government trade sanction.
- Current Status: As of 2026, Yandex N.V. has sold its Russian operations to a local consortium, and its founder is free from EU restrictions, though the company's Russian assets remain under local control amid ongoing geopolitical tensions.

Now that we have a proper basic intel, let's dive more deep into both Chachava and Lukoil.

Lukoil deep dive

What's this company purpose?

By doing a simple research on wikipedia i've found this key informations:

PJSC Lukoil Oil Company (Russian in Cyrillic script: Лукойл [ˈlukɔjɪl], stylized as LUKOIL and ЛУКОЙЛ in Russian Cyrillic) is a Russian multinational energy corporation headquartered in Moscow, specializing in the business of extraction, production, transport, and sale of petroleum, natural gas, petroleum products, and electricity.

It was formed in 1991 when three state-run companies from western Siberia merged. The original companies were named after the towns in Khanty–Mansi Autonomous Okrug where each was based: Langepasneftegaz, Urayneftegaz, and Kogalymneftegaz. Its new name is the combination of the acronym LUK (initials of the oil-producing cities of Langepas, Uray, Kogalym) and the English word oil.³(https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lukoil#cite_note-3)[[4]](https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lukoil#cite_note-5-4)

Lukoil is the third largest company in Russia after Rosneft and Gazprom, and the country's largest non-state enterprise in terms of revenue, with ₹4,744 billion in 2018.⁵(https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lukoil#cite_note-rbc20180112-5)[[6]](https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lukoil#cite_note-6) In the 2020 Forbes Global 2000, Lukoil was ranked as the 99th-largest public company in the world. [_[failed verification](<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wikipedia:Verifiability> "Wikipedia:Verifiability")_] In 2021, it had operations and subsidiaries in more than 30 countries around the world, but as of 2025, that was down to 14 countries.⁸(https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lukoil#cite_note-reuters-8) The company's revenue amounted to 2.9 trillion rubles in 2022, and reached 3 trillion rubles in 2024.⁹(https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lukoil#cite_note-9) in July 2010, the top managers of the company owned the largest stake (more than 30%) of the company's shares: CEO Vagit Alekperov owning 20.6% and vice-president Leonid Fedun owning 9.8%. The American oil company ConocoPhillips owned 19.21% but, due to financial difficulties, completely withdrew from the shareholders of Lukoil, selling its shares, and in part to Lukoil itself by February 2011. The remaining shares were freely traded on the London Stock Exchange, the Frankfurt Stock Exchange, the Russian Trading System, and the Moscow Interbank Currency Exchange. The company's market capitalization was $60.4 billion as of June 2018.
